

Auditioning for Commercials: What To Expect

Finally a book on how to audition for commercials from the actors point of view. Rand Holdren has booked more than sixty commercials in a fifteen-year span in Los Angeles. He freely discusses both his successes and failures while sharing tips to help others navigate commercial auditions. Auditioning for Commercials: What to Expect helps budding actors improve their skills and be more productive during their auditions. Its a complete guide covering steps such as how to assemble headshots, navigate the actor-agent relationship, handle auditions, and prepare once you book a job. Rand includes checklists in each chapter to summarize how people can prepare for each process. He keeps his advice casual, making his book an easy read while giving readers the most complete account of auditioning he can provide. You wont find a full-scale tutorial on how to act during an audition, but you will learn the inner workings of the commercial audition process so that you get your best shot at booking a job. Rand gives an insightful look at the highly competitive commercial audition landscape from a successful insiders perspective. This book is an excellent how-to manual for anyone trying to break into commercials. Rand has been performing consistently for my company, Ross Lacy Casting, for over 12 years. Ross Lacy, Casting Director, Owner/President of Ross Lacy Casting The knowledge Rand shares is a highly useful tool for actors who are starting out in commercials. Knowing what to expect, and how to handle the room can make the difference from being an actor to a working actor. Steve Wi, Commercial Production, Owner/Executive ProducerRaucous Content Wish this book had been around when I was cutting my teeth in this business. You mightve seen me in a commercial or two and not pedaling khakis at the GAP. David Anders, Actor, Alias, Heroes, iZombie
