

Highwaymen Of The Railroad

A First Person Account of the Man Who Caught Some of the Most Notorious Train Robbers As Told by William Pinkerton... Highwaymen of the Railroad, written by William A. Pinkerton of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, appeared in The North American Review in November, 1893. The Pinkerton Agency was founded by Williams father, Allan Pinkerton, a Scottish immigrant in 1850. Quickly, he became one of the most important figures in crime detection and law enforcement during the latter half of the 19th century. Both William and his brother Robert worked at the agency, eventually taking it over after their father died in 1884. Though no longer family run, Pinkertons Inc. is still in business today. This writing describes the crimes and captures of the following notorious highwaymen train robbers: Reno Brothers - John, Frank, William and Sim Reno of Seymour, Indiana Levi and Hillary Farrington, William Barton, and William Taylor of Western Tennessee James and Younger brothers - Jesse and Frank James, and John, Coleman, Jim, and Robert Younger, Robert and Charles Ford of Missouri Sam Bass, and Collins brothers, and Berry - Joel Collins Jim and Rube Burrow of Alabama Fred Wittrock of Leavenworth, Kansas Dalton brothers Denton Slye, Marion Hedgepeth, Dink Wilson and Tom Francis Sontag brothers, and Chris Evans Hoagan brothers The Pinkerton Detective Dynasty Allan Pinkerton, 1819 1884 Founder of the agency that eventually became synonymous with detectives in general, Pinkertons is the best remembered name in a largely forgotten detective history. Serving as an effective national police force in the second half of the 19th century, the Pinkerton agency fought spies and assassins in the Civil War, and infamous gangs like the Jameses and Renos during the Wild West era of legend. William and Robert Pinkerton The Pinkerton dynastys later generations have almost vanished in the large shadow of its founder. Yet William and Robert were, arguably, even greater detectives than their father, and at least as famous in their time. Together or separately they tracked some of the most colorful and daring criminals of the Victorian era, from the most remote corners of the United States to the capitals of Latin America and Europe. Through their duels with master thieves, including The Napoleon of Crime Adam Worth, the Pinkerton brothers won international fame and respect for themselves and their agency. At the same time, however, they also expanded business into security operations and, as a consequence, into the violent struggle between capital and labor to a disastrous result.
