

Reporting Live

When she first started out in network television, Lesley Stahl was 30 years old and the men she shared the newsroom with were already legendary. In the ensuing 25 years and counting, Stahl has covered every major story and has become one of the most highly regarded reporters in the country. In this celebrity-filled, anecdote-packed memoir, Lesley Stahl tells how she has kept her focus -- and her sense of humor -- through all of this success. Just two months into her job in the CBS Washington Bureau, a third-rate burglary at the Watergate was deemed so unnewsworthy that the new girl, Stahl, was the only television reporter sent to cover the burglars initial court appearances. Not only would she provide CBS with an early scoop in the story, she would meet, and become romantically linked to, another young reporter covering the case for The Washington Post, Bob Woodward. While Stahl cut her teeth on Washington political reporting, cultivating sources and gradually building a reputation as a scoopster, she learned to overcome the stigma of affirmative action. She went on to cover the next three presidents, witnessing the disintegration of the Jimmy Carter presidency, the rise and fall and rise again of Ronald Reagans, and the unfocused regular-guyness of George Bushs. She offers sharp and nuanced portraits of these presidents and their wives as well as of many of her guests on Face the Nation, which she moderated for eight years. Stahl also describes the ups and downs of network television news as competition from cable began to siphon off the audience. Stahl shares the struggle of forging her career while figuring out how to spend time with her husband, Aaron (Urban Cowboy) Latham, and their daughter, Taylor. Reporting Live is filled with heads of state; network moguls; competing journalists; her mother, Dolly; John Madden; John Travolta; John Dean -- everybody from George Bush to Boy George. Lesley Stahl is one of the toughest, most glamorous, and most respected reporters in the business. She has written a funny, real, knowledgeable book that takes the reader inside the White House and inside the world of television news.
