

Island of Shadows

Island of Shadows was first penned as a screenplay, with the opening scenes in Hollywood, California and Pinewood Studios in England, with a story line following the antics of an ambitious writer seeking to get his first major movie off the ground, soliciting the support of a well known director, albeit now somewhat past his prime. In his view the plot needs a first class leading lady and his first choice would be a particular star, once a major box office success in Hollywood but now a recluse living on a lonely Mediterranean island. The young writer accepts the challenge to try and persuade her to come out of retirement and star in the film and sets off on his travels. But all is not what it seems to be as the director and his onetime star have a hidden agenda that drags the writer in to a world of drug running and finally, into a lonely prison cell. But that's all for now, other than to say that it is a world of complete fiction. Some of the geographical settings are a matter of fact but the characters and the incidents in which they become involved are purely the product of the authors imagination and used fictitiously, bearing no resemblance to any actual persons living or dead.
