Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: ...to it for the purpose of introducing the name of Mr. Justice James Allan Parke, who presided upon that occasion, for the last time before his death. He is not unworthy of being remembered as a lawyer of the old school, with prejudices of the oldest. I am not sure whether he wore a pig-tail; he ought to have if he did not. He was singularly like his Majesty George the Third, a fact of which he was proud. He was called St. James Park, to distinguish him from the judge of the same name who was called Green Park. He was well versed in the more abstruse branches of the profession, and was generally respected by the public and the bar. In his latter days he had acquired a habit of thinking aloud, which led on one occasion to a rather amusing incident. Whilst trying an old woman upon a charge of stealing faggots, he unconsciously ejaculated, Why, one faggot is as like another faggot as one egg is like another egg. The counsel defending the case heard the observation and ANECDOTE OF MIDLAND CIRCUIT. 155 repeated it to the jury. Stop, said Sir James--stop; it is an intervention of Providence. This was the very thought that passed through my mind. Gentlemen (addressing the jury), acquit the prisoner. I cannot resist telling a story, although it does not say much for the decorum of the old Midland Circuit, or of the eminent lawyers who practised upon it in those days. Serjeants were then an institution, and the old Midland boasted of many most learned and eminent ones: Goulburn, Clark, Vaughan, Adams, Hayes, are no mean names, and were all of this rank; but those were times when even Serjeants were not always distinguished for sobriety, and it so happened that upon one particular evening much conviviality had been indulged in, the merry party being congre...
