Not illustrated. 1868 Excerpt: ...nostra ad diem et locum in brevi contentos certifies indilate; and your election made in your full county court, distinctly and openly under your seal and the seals of those who shall have been present at that election, you certify without delay to us in our chancery at the day and place contained in the writ? It appears by the preamble of this important enactment, that the occasion of it was the grievous complaint of the commons of undue elections made by the sheriifs from partiality and other causes. The nature of the grievance further appears from the direction that elections are for the future to be made freely and indiflerently, notwithstanding any request or commandment to the contrary. In the preceding reign of Richard IL, a practice of undue interference with elections had been commenced, and had been made one of the articles of accusation upon which the deposition of that king was founded. Next we find it provided that proclamation is to be made in full county court of the day and place of the parliament. To this it may be added, that in the contemporaneous articles for the regulation of the royal household of Henry IV., to which frequent reference has been made, it was provided (Art. 22) that all the sheriffs, before the election of knights of the shire, shall, by open proclamation in their several counties, give fifteen days respite to the time and place. The electors are defined to be all they that be present, as well suitors duly summoned for the same cause as others. A very important question arises on the meaning of this word others. Does it mean other causes, or other persons? Were the electors to be all persons present as well suitors as other persons? or were they all suitors
