Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: ...the office of professor extraordinary a sinecure, but Galileo, the man who held it, was a layman. This being the case, it was hoped that an appeal might be successfully made to the conscience of the young Grand Duke, and that he might be brought to see the impropriety of allowing any portion of a revenue derived from ecclesiastical sources to be enjoyed except by an ecclesiastic. But a portion (2,000 crowns) of this same revenue had been employed in the equipment of the grand-ducal fleet; and this was felt by Galileos friends to be a strong argument in his favor. The Guidodc opinion of the most eminent jurists in Tusctdifl cany being taken, and being universally in Arrighetti, favor of Galileos retaining; his stipend, the advocates,. andNiaoio question was entirely set at rest, and the Cuzty theo-. .. logian, anti-Copernicans once more defeated. In adSantaMaria dition, Galileo was shortly after elected one deiFwre. Of magistrates of the University. In the beginning of November, 1628, Sister Maria Celeste writes again in great distress. Her sisters health had been worse than usual, but she had thought little of it, ill-health being the normal condition of most sister of the nuns at St. Matthews. But certain ArcangekCs. illness. symptoms had appeared which were both unusual and alarming. She knows her sister ought to be 1628. SISTER ARCAAGELAS ILLNESS. 155 bled, and had therefore sent for the surgeon; but she has neither money to pay him, nor to procure the necessary comforts for the poor invalid, who had fallen into her usual melancholy mood. In this extremity she entreats her father for the love of God to send Vincenzo, if the weather will allow, that she may tell him her troubles, which yet cannot be sent f...
