This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1899 edition. Excerpt: ...much as the older men sit after writing their big stories. Others had written The Story of other days, but few of them had ever felt the managing editor lean over them while writing, and say, Good work, my boy! and pat them on the back. It was at this point that Van Cise, the city editor, looking excited, came running down the room toward Carrington. Close behind him came Mr. Reed with a scared look on his face, a telegram in his hand. Mr. Carrington, the latter began, did you ask him that question alone? Did you? Carrington looked up puzzled. The managing editors voice was more nervous than he had ever heard it before. Van Cise interrupted vigorously: Quick! did you? The Secretary of State--Damn it, say something! Young Carrington was wondering what there was to be excited about. Alone? Oh, why--yes, sir; I asked that question all by myself. He smiled up good-naturedly. Good! exclaimed the city editor, slapping the desk. Why didnt you say so before? Then, Mr. Reed, it must be a beat, sir. But Reed, looking closely at Carrington, only said, This is all pat, then? Read that. His tone was gentle, as though talking to a scared child. Quick; this is important. Carrington saw his hand tremble as he held out the telegram. The cub reporter took his feet down from the table. Why--why, no sir, he said, getting up, I didnt have any private interview. Reed simply stared at him, but Van Cise-exclaimed, What! you just now said No, I said I asked that question by myself--on my own hook, that is. Why, the others were all right there. I thought All right there! exclaimed Van Cise....
