

Urs, the Swiss Black Boy: A Rollercoaster between the High Life and Bankruptcy

Nr. 8 Swiss Bestseller List Originally, Urs Althaus wanted to become a professional footballer. But what actually happened, nobody in Altdorf, where he grew up with his single mother, could have anticipated. The illegitimate child of a Nigerian medical student, who he never met and a Swiss mother, stormed the worlds fashion catwalks. He walked for designers like Calvin Klein, Valentino, Armani, Kenzo, Yves Saint Laurent. He was the first black male model who made it on the cover of the American fashion magazine GQ. As an actor, he was in front of the camera with Marcello Mastroianni and in the film adaptation of Umberto Ecos The Name of the Rose with Sean Connery. He could have gone far if it hadnt been for his carefreeness and gullibility. That he didnt take off in his best days and didnt go under in his worst that is thanks to his safe haven at Lake Lucerne and his mother.

Urs Althaus, born in 1956 in Herliberg in Switzerland, grew up as the only black and Protestant child in Altdorf, in Catholic historic Switzerland, having a much easier time than one would have assumed. After school, he started a football career first with FC Basel and then with FC Zurich, which he had to give up due to an injury. During his commercial training, he got his first modelling job by chance and flew to Tokio. What occurred afterwards is a life between fairy tale and nightmare. After many happy as well as unhappy years abroad, Urs Althaus now lives in Switzerland again and as an actor time and again in Italy.
